

Why Am I Here? Why Do I Go To Church?

Last week, I invited everyone to reflect on the following quote from the booklet, "Holy Island: A Lenten Pilgrimage to Lindisfarne" by James W. Kennedy. The booklet was first published in 1958.

"The Church, which is often described as a hospital, contains too many patients who fail to get well. The Church, often described as a school, contains too many pupils who fail to learn. Is this then, the Church's witness to the world, sick and ignorant disciples who know not the Christ whom they claim as Lord?"

Read Kelly's response below. I welcome more of you to enter into dialogue regarding Rev. Kennedy's striking observation of the Church which still rings true today.

Hey Father,

I just wanted to send you my view on how things are going in our parish. Last night while listening to your homily, I was moved to include my input in the dialogue that we've been having as a parish. Not necessarily regarding my WHY as far as why I attend Mass but more of the general direction it seems the church is going, especially in light of the letter that you read in church.

I officially became a Catholic almost 8 years ago coming from a Protestant background. As much as I love the beliefs and traditions of the Catholic church, up until Christ Life I felt that something was missing. I am not saying it is our parish's fault or the Catholic church's fault, but Christ Life was a turning point...one I felt in my heart was in the right direction. A true, deep, and personal relationship with Christ that somehow I had been missing since joining the church. I started to see the Holy Spirit at work, and a challenge and conviction to change to how I was living my life. Did people I was around day to day know that I was a Christian? No, probably not. Did my life reflect the faith I claimed that I had? Sadly, most of the time no.

Since you have been pushing us and challenging us and, yes, even seeming angry with us sometimes, I have been convicted to try to conform my life more to the Gospel instead of the other way around, as you talked about in this week's homily. I have been that pupil who wasn't learning and that patient who just stayed sick and sometimes I still am. I commend you for your strong stance and for challenging us to look at the hard things...we have been comfortable for too long.

The world should know us by our fruits...they should know we are different, we should stand out, people around us should know that we are not of this world. My life has not and does not always reflect that.

Thank you Father Gerry for standing up for what is right, for not conforming to the status quo and for imploring us not to either.

Kelly McBride
